

This is pretty much a direct translation of the mockup, so I think it still looks really good! It looks like you haven't really fully figured out the responsiveness of the site, because at small sizes things start to wrap weirdly (especially the nav bar) also the blocks of text wrap around the section titles kind of strangely. As for the full size layout, I think the nav bar and paragraph fonts need to be bigger for readability. Maybe we could have them big on large sizes and scale down as needed. I also think it would be nice to have a fixed nav bar so the user can navigate from different parts of the site. Those are really the only things that I think need to be done.

For a couple things that would be nice to have, again just a little more color in some sections of the site could be nice. Maybe a color change on hover in the nav bar and an additional picture in the work section. That way we can keep the gallery/professional feel but at a little extra interest. I think life and gallery look perfect, and I like the cover photo. I also think the sources section seems kind of unfinished in its design, possibly partially because of the large discrepancy between the size of the sources themselves and the size of the actual title. Maybe we could play around with the placement of the links because I think the top-left positioning makes the section look extra blank. Another idea would be maybe adding some color blocking to the sources section to make it more visually interesting, like some irregularly-sized div blocks in different colors that correspond to her works. I'd be happy to talk more over slack to discuss any of these changes or hear other ideas for the sources section.
